SHOPIFY SUPPLEMENT PRODUCT PAGES

The product page first look.

A 10-point checklist and a copy-paste prompt you can run on your own product page with ChatGPT, Claude or Gemini.

1. Tick the checklist yourself, on your phone, as a first-time buyer.
2. Run the prompt on the same page, with two screenshots.
3. Compare. Where you and the AI both left a box empty, start there.

THE CHECKLIST

10 checks on one product page

Open the product page your paid traffic lands on, on your phone. Tick what's already there.

- [ ] 1. First screen
  Without scrolling, on mobile: who it's for, when they'd use it, the price and the dose. A real-life moment, not only the packaging.

- [ ] 2. The main idea
  What makes the brand different is visible near the top, not hidden in a closed tab.

- [ ] 3. Buy box
  Shipping, guarantee and payment options next to the add-to-cart button. A buy-now / express option.

- [ ] 4. Price per day
  How long one pack lasts and what it costs per day or per serving, without doing the maths.

- [ ] 5. Subscription maths
  Subscribing is actually cheaper at every quantity, and the perks are visible without clicking.

- [ ] 6. Reviews
  Reviews appear before the bottom of the page.

- [ ] 7. Claims
  Ingredient benefits are stated plainly and can be backed up. Strong health promises checked with someone qualified.

- [ ] 8. Text, not just images
  Ingredients, dose and pack size are written as text, not only on the box photo.

- [ ] 9. Mobile buying
  Add to cart stays within reach while scrolling. No reloads, jumps or pop-ups in the way.

- [ ] 10. Ad match
  The first screen continues the story of the ad that sent the visitor there.

THE PROMPT

Copy, replace the brackets, paste.

Add your product page URL, and two screenshots if you can: the first screen on mobile and the buy box.

```
You are reviewing a Shopify supplement product page the way a first-time visitor from an ad would see it. Be specific and honest. Only report what you can actually see on the page or in the screenshots I attach. If you can't see or check something, say "couldn't check" and why.
Never guess, and never invent numbers.

Product page: [PRODUCT PAGE URL]
Ad angle (optional): [ONE LINE ABOUT THE AD THAT SENDS PEOPLE HERE, OR "unknown"]
Screenshots: [ATTACHED / NONE]

Check these 10 things, in this order:

1. FIRST SCREEN — Without scrolling (mobile), can a stranger tell who this is for, when they would use it, the price and the dose? Is there an image or line showing the real-life moment, or only the packaging?
2. THE MAIN IDEA — What makes this brand different? Is it visible near the top, or hidden in a closed tab / accordion further down?
3. BUY BOX — Next to the price and add-to-cart button: are shipping, the guarantee and payment options visible, or do they only show up in the cart? Is there a "buy now" / express checkout option?
4. PRICE PER DAY — Can the visitor see how long one pack lasts and what it costs per day or per serving, without doing the maths themselves?
5. SUBSCRIPTION MATHS — If there's a subscribe option: compare the price per unit with the one-off price at every quantity shown. Is subscribing actually cheaper at each quantity?
   Are the subscription perks visible without clicking into the subscription option?
6. REVIEWS — Where do reviews first appear on the page? Before the visitor has to scroll to the bottom? Note: review widgets often load with JavaScript and may be invisible to you.
   If you see no reviews, say "couldn't check" rather than "no reviews".
7. CLAIMS — Are ingredient benefits stated plainly, and is there any sign they're backed (e.g. referenced to approved health claims or studies)? Don't give legal advice; just flag anything that looks like a strong health promise so I can check it with someone qualified.
8. TEXT, NOT JUST IMAGES — Are the ingredients, dose and pack size written on the page as text, or only shown on the box photo? (Search engines and AI assistants can only read the text.)
9. MOBILE BUYING — On mobile, is the add-to-cart button still within reach while scrolling?
   Anything that interrupts buying: switching flavour/size reloads the page or jumps to the top, a pop-up covering the buy box, the useful sections only at the very bottom.
10. AD MATCH — If I gave an ad angle: does the first screen continue that story, or does the visitor land on a generic page?

Then list the first 3 questions a first-time buyer would have that this page doesn't answer.

Answer in this format:
- A table: check | what I see | ✓ / ✗ / couldn't check
- The 3 unanswered buyer questions
- The 3 changes you would make first, each with "how it is now" and "what I'd change"
- "What this first look can't tell you" (e.g. conversion by traffic source, device data, whether something was a deliberate choice)
```

YOUR NOTES

What came out

The 3 questions a first-time buyer can't answer on my page:

Boxes both I and the AI left empty (start here):

What the AI couldn't check:

WHY IT'S BUILT LIKE THIS

These checks come from product pages I've looked at myself.

- AI tools miss things. On one store, an automated review said the page had no reviews. It did; the widget loaded with JavaScript and the tool never saw it. That's why the prompt says "couldn't check" instead of guessing, and why the screenshots matter.
- The strongest argument is often already on the page, just not where the decision happens: inside a closed tab, or below the reviews.
- Subscriptions deserve the maths. On one store I reviewed, from two boxes up the subscription cost exactly the same per box as a one-off order.
- Read your page as a buyer, on your phone. The first three questions you can't answer belong on the first screen or in the FAQ.

This is a first look, not an audit. A full audit goes much deeper: traffic sources, conversion by device, the offer, the numbers.

If you'd like a second pair of eyes on what came out, send me a message on LinkedIn.

Message me on LinkedIn →